The Catalina Foothills School District in Tucson, Arizona, offers a comprehensive school psychologist internship providing supervised, field-based experience across preschool to high school settings. Interns will take on their own caseload at the same school as their internship supervisor, ensuring close guidance and mentorship. To ensure a well-rounded experience, interns will rotate through different school levels each quarter. During the first quarter, they will be assigned to the high school, followed by experiences at the elementary, middle school, and preschool levels for the remaining three quarters. Interns will engage in diverse professional duties, including assessment, intervention, consultation, prevention, and training, reflecting the responsibilities of a practicing school psychologist. They will also enhance their skills in data-based decision-making, collaboration, and fostering social-emotional well-being for a diverse student population. Additionally, interns will gain a deeper understanding of school systems and develop expertise in implementing evidence-based practices to support effective learning environments.
